

OUR COMMITMENT TO FOOD SAFETY

Orca Bay Seafoods is committed to providing safe and quality products. Our sourcing program relies on vendor certification and independent inspectors to achieve our quality goals. All of our vendors go through a detailed approval process before we source any products from them. This approval process requires visits to the plant/farms by our company representatives, reviews of their processing records, and yearly third party safety audits. We also contract with SGS, a world-recognized testing company, to inspect all products packed for Orca Bay Seafoods.

OUR SAFETY AT A GLANCE

We only work with HACCP certified suppliers and hold them to our high quality standards. We inspect all seafood prior to shipping to our processing facility using laboratory and organoleptic methods. Utilizing SGS's expertise and their worldwide network of laboratories. The laboratory testing protocols can detect any traces of:

Flouroquinolones - Malachite Green - Gentian Violet - Invermectine
Flumequine - Oxolinic Acid - Mercury - Histamine

The organoleptic testing is to confirm our products meet our standards for freshness and wholesomeness. Although not a food safety concern, we also inspect for true net weights, proper grading and adherence to specifications.

We conduct additional testing in our facility to insure our products meets or exceed all safety standards.

We require our vendors to pass a rigorous food-safety audit on an annual basis. We employ the BRC Global Standard, a program developed in 1998 in the United Kingdom that is focused on food safety. By employing this standard among all our vendors, we can ensure that food safety practices are consistent in every country we source from.

We can trace all our seafood back to the factory of origin and ultimately all the way to the raw material source. We procure from US harvesters and primary processors as well as importing species and products that are not offered through domestic sources.
